Overview

Introduction

This topic provides a list of messages that occur in the FAACS online system's screens and reports. FAACS users may encounter two types of messages.

FAACS has edit routines designed to ensure all data entered into FAACS master file asset records is valid. One set of errors and related messages results from systems edits that ensure the validity of data entered in FAACS data elements. These messages have assigned code numbers and are contained in the FAACS error message table that is accessed during screen edits of data elements. These messages are termed routine edit error messages. Presentation of these error messages generally includes the correct format for valid data for the related data element.

Another set of messages has been made necessary by the use of the online data entry environment. Some of these are error messages, others merely communicate necessary information. These are not contained in the error message table but are an integral part of the online operating environment. They do not have assigned code numbers. These messages may be termed online environment messages. These messages are generally self-explanatory.

Up to four messages can be displayed simultaneously on the screens of the FAACS online system.

Since this topic contains only messages that occur frequently, an agency may encounter messages NOT listed in this topic. If this occurs, first determine whether the message provides sufficient explanation to correct the situation. If NOT, contact the Assistant Manager, Fixed Assets and Indirect Cost, whose contact information is shown below.

Online Environment Error Messages

Online Environment error messages provide a list of errors resulting from the incorrect use of the online system. These error messages appear on screens in the FAACS online system. Some of these represent errors requiring correction, while others represent conditions requiring no action. They have been categorized since many represent similar conditions.
